Pearl Diving and its Dangers The pearl fishery commences in the month of February and theminates in that of May; but in the Hindon calendar occur so many feast days that in reality it does not last above a month. Each fishing boat curries a erew of twenty men, half divers and half sailors, heaides the master and pilot. They start at 10 n'clock in the evening, and, impolled by the night breeze, reach the banks before dawn. They with the to sold upplie mist disk, at the make, when the sea breeze changes its direction and blows toward the land. As soon as daylight appears the divers begin their labors. They are divided. into two sections, which alternately dive and rest. Each diver grasps with the toes of his right foot a rope which is attached at one extremity to a large pyramid shaped etone, deat the bottom of the water. It is moored, so to speak, to a boat by a rope, which, at the same time, enables the diver to communicate foremost, as is commonly, supposed. With his laft fant he holds his uet, with his right hund the stone weighted cord; with his left hand he pipches his nose; his cars are stopped up with cotton soaked in oil. When he arrives at the hattom he rapidly picks off all the hysters within his reach, fills the net or bag, which beings round his neck, and at a given signal is frawn un again by his companions. The greatest depth at which the diver can work does not exceed eight or nine fatheins, nor can be ignain under water longer them half a minute. Those tales which represent certain divers as spending a minute. or even several minutes, ander an chormous mass of water. whose pressure is more than two-fold that of the atmosphere, are

This exereige, repeated thirty days every year, soon affects the health of the unfortunate people who purano it. A diver rarely grows old. Many contract at an early stage of their career a frightful disease, which soon rend ra impossible the exercise of their bazardons profession.
